Pet diabetes is a common thing these days. Be it a cat or dog, there is a possibility of having diabetes. Some of the common symptoms are gaining or losing weight, other medications, change in an exercise regimen, excessive water drinking and increased urination, cloudy eyes (especially in dogs), chronic or recurring infections, decreased appetite, etc.

Is there any sudden change in your pet that you are experiencing? Consult your veterinarian immediately. Also, you should monitor your pet's progress regularly.

There are two ways you can monitor your pet's glucose level checking the pet's urine for the presence of glucose and ketones and measuring glucose levels in the pet's blood. However, checking glucose levels is easy and accurate that you can do at your home using a portable glucometer and blood test strips.

Don't you aware of the BASIC METHOD TO MONITOR BLOOD GLUCOSE? LET'S DISCUSS.....

When it comes to a stable blood glucose level of dogs and cats, it is about 100–250 mg/dL for dogs and about 120-350 mg/dL for most of the day for cats.

For measuring the blood glucose level of your pet at home, you can use a glucometer that is easy to use. You should have a glucometer and Glucose Strips for Pet Diabetes to collect blood from the earflap of your pet.

The process—

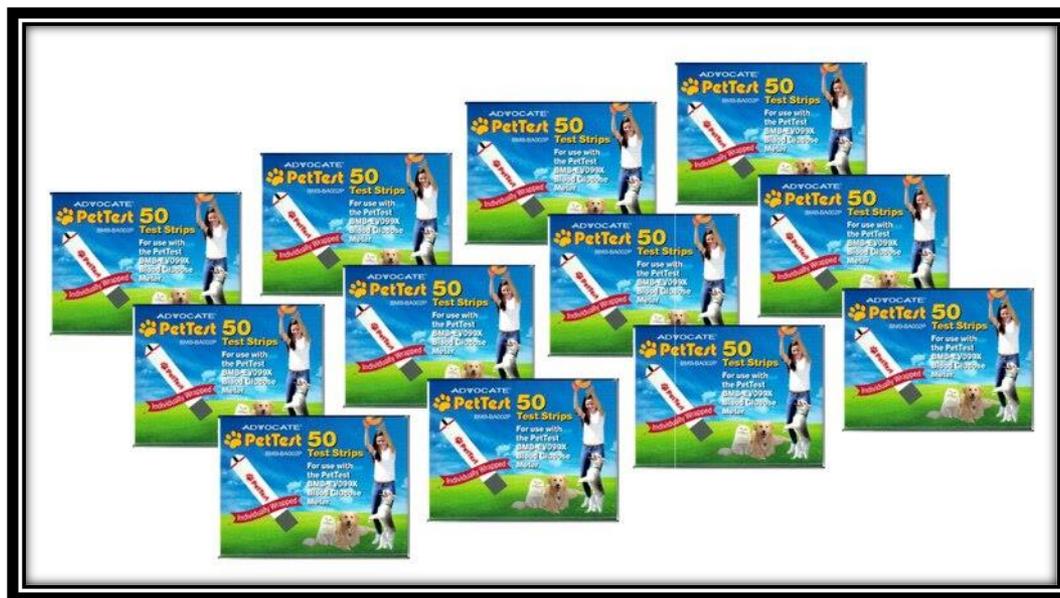

The ear of your pet should be warm which will make it easy to collect a drop of blood.

Choose a hairless part of the ear and prick with a hygienic hypodermic lancet.

Then collect the drop of blood onto the glucose test strip. Precisely read the test strip or if you are using a glucometer, then insert the sample into it as per the instruction.

Record the reading to show to your veterinarian. However, you should perform this process by reading all the instructions thoroughly. Or you can seek the help of a professional.
