I've found Conway's law [38] to hold in all cases during my working experience.The present invention relates to a semiconductor memory device and a method of manufacturing the same, and more particularly to a semiconductor memory device and a method of manufacturing the same in which a contact plug can be formed with a high density. Generally, in a conventional semiconductor memory device, a contact hole is formed to connect a bit line and a storage node in order to reduce the resistance of the bit line. A conventional contact hole forming method will be described in the following. FIGS. 1 and 2 are cross-sectional views illustrating a semiconductor memory device according to the prior art. Referring to FIGS. 1 and 2, contact plugs are formed to prevent the contact resistance of the bit line from being increased, and a contact hole is formed in a semiconductor substrate 10 to expose a cell array region. Referring to FIG. 1, a first insulating layer 11 is formed on the semiconductor substrate 10, and then a first contact hole 12 exposing the cell array region is formed by patterning the first insulating layer 11 through a photolithography process using a first photoresist pattern. Subsequently, a conductive layer for filling the first contact hole 12 is formed on the semiconductor substrate 10, and the conductive layer formed on the first insulating layer 11 is etched. As a result, a conductive layer 13 is formed within the first contact hole 12. Thereafter, an anti-reflection layer (AR) pattern 14 having a double line width of about 2.mu.m is formed
